Code of Conduct for Seminars

Department of Economics

- Be constructive: Think about how you would improve the project had you been a project collaborator.

- Allow presenters sufficient time at the beginning to frame their talk without interruption. Do not interrupt with questions for the first 5-10 minutes.

- Raise your hand before asking a question. (Please consider whether you should interrupt at an appropriate time for online seminars.)

- Give space. There is limited time at a seminar. Please assess whether the presenter will likely address your question before you ask it. Also, please listen to the questions others have asked, not to repeat.

- Do not insist when the presenter does not answer your question precisely.

- Avoid conversations with other attendees.

- Strive for fair treatment. Be sure to treat the presenter with respect and adjust your level of comments to the professional level of the presenter.
